Alerts Back in 2016, I wrote numerous articles discussing the issues and dangers of the political divide that was developing within the U.S., and many of these articles focused on who actually benefits. I stated: When I mentioned in my last article the crippling of social justice, I did not mention that this could have some negative reverberations. With Trump and conservatives taking near-total power after the Left had assumed they would never lose again, their reaction has been to transform. They are stepping away from the normal activities and mindset of cultural Marxism and evolving into full blown communists. Instead of admitting that their ideology is a failure in every respect, they are doubling down. When this evolution is complete, the Left WILL resort to direct violent action on a larger scale, and they will do so with a clear conscience because, in their minds, they are fighting fascism. Ironically, it will be this behavior by leftists that may actually push conservatives toward a fascist model. Conservatives might decide to fight crazy with more crazy. But social justice movements are not the primary threat, they are merely a symptom of the disease, a cancer called globalism. There is an open and admitted organized effort on the part of a tiny minority of power brokers and money elites in our society that seek to manipulate the public into accepting the notion of total centralization and the end of personal liberty and national sovereignty in the name of an arbitrary "greater good." This is not "conspiracy theory," this is conspiracy fact. As Richard N. Gardner, former deputy assistant Secretary of State for International Organizations under Kennedy and Johnson, and a member of the Trilateral Commission, wrote in the April 1974 issue of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) journal Foreign Affairs (pg. 558) in an article titled "Hard Road To World Order": In short, the 'house of world order' will have to be built from the bottom up rather than from the top down. It will look like a great 'booming, buzzing confusion,' to use William James' famous description of reality, but an end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece, will accomplish much more than the old-fashioned frontal assault. It is my view, according to the evidence, that the social justice left is a cultivated threat, a product of the gatekeepers of Cultural Marxism that has been gestated over decades to the stage we now see today – a mass movement of mostly insane narcissists and sociopaths obsessed with identity politics and the destruction of the "Old World." It was globalist institutions like the Rockefeller Foundation and the Ford Foundation that funded different elements of the feminist movement and "gender studies" movements from the late 1960s onward. This included the Rockefeller Foundation's large donations to 'The Feminist Press' and the Ford Foundation's programs to indoctrinate teachers into injecting social justice talking points into their curriculum. This is openly admitted in Alison R. Bernstein's book Funding The Future: Philanthropy's Influence On America's Higher Education. Bernstein is the vice president of Education at the Ford Foundation and the former Associate Dean of Faculty at Princeton. That's right folks, social justice activism was paid for and launched by the so-called "patriarchy." This is the reality, and it never stopped. Even today SJW groups are funded by globalists. For example, as the mainstream media often tries to dismiss or ignore, Black Lives Matter was initially funded by the Ford Foundation and George Soros and his Open Society Foundation. BLM coffers were flooded with over $100 million from uber-rich white capitalists. Again, this is a fact that even the dishonest spin doctors at Snopes were not able to deny. Instead, they attempt to use straw man arguments and sophistry to distract from the implication of extreme-left mobs receiving seed money from elitist billionaires. The political left is a horde of useful idiots being exploited by the establishment as weapons of disruption and radical change, but to what end? If there is one behavior that stands out above all others as a defining trait of the social justice left, in my opinion, it is their obsession with exploiting tragedy and crisis for their own personal and political gain. The George Floyd incident, a terrible event to be sure, should have been held up as a prime example of police abuse, yet it was immediately twisted by BLM into an issue of "systemic racism." There is no proof of systemic racism. There's not even any proof that George Floyd was killed because he was black. Police abuse is something that affects every American equally, not just black Americans. FBI statistics show this clearly, along with the fact that black-on-black crime is a far greater cause of death than the police. SJWs simply declare them "racist." The narrative was hijacked by the political left and they reveled in the death of George Floyd as a means to push numerous unrelated agendas forward as quickly as possible. These agendas include a vast array of censorship in social media and a firestorm of cancel culture threatening anyone who does not agree with the prevailing leftist narrative. People are losing their platforms, their jobs and their reputations are being dragged through the mud, and the mainstream media is helping to make this happen. Now, as a true conservative, I respect the boundaries of private property, and to be sure, a website is private property. A social media company has the right to remove people and content they don't like, just as any person has the right to remove someone they don't like from their home. That said, there are some exceptions to this. For example, when a company has a monopoly over a certain means of communication, then censorship becomes a legal problem and that company must be either limited or broken up. Monopolies are not natural functions of a free market, they are attempts by elites to subvert free markets. Corporations in general receive their charters from government, along with the protection of limited liability and corporate personhood. They are not a natural part of the economy; they are aberrations created by the government. Therefore, corporations must either be regulated or abolished and replaced with classical business partnerships as existed for centuries before corporations were ever thought up. That said, the danger of monopolies does not only extend to corporations. There can also be such a thing as a political or ideological monopoly as well. When a particular minority of ideologues take over a vast majority of mass communication outlets and actively seeks to squeeze out any dissenting voices so that only one point of view is presented to the public, what else do we call this but a monopoly? I see where the cancel culture is going, and it is going to a very ugly place. While Google's removal of ad revenue from conservative websites like Zero Hedge is a legal gray area, the attacks will go far beyond monetization. Eventually, I predict there will be an attempt to influence website host providers to remove "offending" sites altogether. One might argue that handing the government the power to nationalize the internet would help to protect free speech, but I doubt that. The government is run by the same ghouls that are funding the social justice cult. Why should we trust them to police the web fairly? The political left is not only asserting control over the web, but also restrictions in major population centers. If you lived in a major U.S. city during the first pandemic lockdowns, then you have seen the extreme lengths leftist politicians will go to assert dominance. Why are Americans in these cities being admonished from even going outside? You do know that viruses are far less communicable in open areas than indoors, right? No one catches a virus from jogging through a park or walking on a beach. Such rules seem like they stem from a severe ignorance of how viruses survive and function, but it's not ignorance; it's deliberate. These draconian rules are not about saving lives, they are about control, and many conservatives are fed up with it. Add to this the fact that city governments like Seattle are actively encouraging civil unrest and rioting by Antifa and BLM, and something has to give. The insanity of the left is triggering a balkanization of the U.S., and I'm not so sure this is a bad thing. It is clear that SJWs cannot live with or get along with anyone who respects liberty or logic. They are a destructive force in society, and they have no comprehension of the non-aggression principle. They believe that they have the right to enforce their ideology and beliefs on others. They infest every aspect of our culture with the sole intent of destroying what we have previously built so that our history can be erased and replaced. It is only natural that reasonable and free-thinking people would want to get as far away from them as possible. There has been much talk in the mainstream lately about the growing exodus from major cities into suburban and rural areas is due to the pandemic. I disagree. In my own state of Montana, there has been a surge of new residents buying properties, and the word is the majority of them are conservatives trying to find like-minded people. They are trying to escape from the madness of the political left. A great exodus is coming, and it will be from leftist stronghold states like California, New York, Illinois, etc., as well as from major cities. People are going to seek out and move to places where their ideals and principles are respected or protected. There has not been a division like this in the U.S. since perhaps the Civil War. I'm sure it's avoidable, and even if it was, I'm not sure it should be avoided. There is something to be said for conservatives and leftists balancing each other out in a community, but when one side becomes aggressive while also being protected, we have limited options. Conservatives are the primary pillar of support propping up these otherwise broken states and communities. Perhaps it's time for producers and liberty advocates to seek out greener pastures and go where they are appreciated? And maybe it's time for progressives and socialists in America to finally stand on their own and be allowed to fail. To truth and knowledge,
