

THE FINANCIAL STRATEGIES OF THE NORTHERN MONEY POWERS

A graphic on the Number of Slave and Free States from 1789 to 1861 – the Balance of Congressional Power

It's very obvious that a shift in the number of States, either to the North or the South, would cause control in the Congress to move and thus dictate in which States the Federal revenue was spent and also determine the Tariff rates on agricultural goods, which was where the Federal treasury obtained 85% of it's money.

The wealthy, in the North, used the abolitionists as tools to keep the balance of voting power in Congress in favor of Northern interests. The arrangement, dictated by a majority of Northern States, was that the Southern States paid most of the revenue into the Federal treasury and then that Federal treasury money was in turn used to subsidize Northern interests and industries. The fight in Kansas and Missouri over "slavery" was all over keeping this balance of power in favor of the Northern financial oligarchs. It had nothing to do with helping the Black man. The Northern oligarchs shrewdly used the abolitionists and their media outlets as a means to keep the financial power in their hands. On the surface, many who were outwardly against slavery were against expanding slavery only due to the fact that the expansion of slavery (and the plantation system which paid the tariffs) could shift the balance of power back to the South. Then the Southern States would have enough votes in Congress to ensure that the tariff money, which they paid into the Federal treasury, would be spent in their own Southern States. The 1860 Republican platform, that was against 'expanding slavery in the Western States", was solely designed to keep the voting power in Congress in favor of Northern interests and yet still maintain slavery in the South which kept production high and thus ensured a steady revenue stream into the Federal coffers (to be used mainly by the North).

As of 1861, and with the election of Lincoln, the South was doomed to be forever ruled as a colony by the Northern oligarchs. Thus came about the battle of the South for States rights and Independence.
